

EMPLOYER FUNDING BRIEF

Employer sponsorship & HRD Corp funding.

A concise internal briefing for a manager, HR team or learning leader evaluating practical management development.

6 months	6 training days	3 scheduled sessions	1 applied project

What you'll get

A clear employer-led funding process, the programme's applied format, a short internal case you can adapt, and answers to the questions a sponsor usually asks.

The outcome is applied, not just attendance.

This is a structured programme built around a live business issue and an applied project — so the organisation sees capability strengthened on its own work, not a generic attendance record.

The Future Ready Executive MBA is a professional development programme recognised by CMI (UK). It is not an MQA-accredited academic degree or a regulated qualification.

What an employer is evaluating.

A practical management-development decision connects three things: the participant's responsibility, the business issue they will work on, and the capability the organisation needs strengthened.

Applied work

Participants bring a current business challenge, use management frameworks to test assumptions and options, and complete an applied business project.

Defined commitment

Six months across six training days, three scheduled sessions, coaching and applied project work.

Professional recognition

Successful participants receive the CMI Certificate of Recognition for the programme — not an academic MBA degree or regulated qualification.

The employer-led HRD Corp process

1. Employer confirms its current eligibility and levy position.
2. Programme team supplies the quotation, schedule, course content and trainer documents.
3. Employer submits the application before training begins. HRD Corp decides eligibility and the approved amount.

Funding is not automatic. The employer and HRD Corp control eligibility, timing and the approved amount.

A short internal conversation starter.

The capability need

The manager is responsible for [team / business unit / project] and needs a more structured method for evaluating complex decisions and leading implementation.

The applied outcome

The participant will work on [current business challenge] and produce an applied business project that can be discussed with the organisation.

The format

Six facilitated training days across three scheduled sessions, coaching and applied work across the six-month programme.

The funding question

Should sponsorship, or an employer-led HRD Corp application, be explored before the selected intake?

Common employer questions.

Does the levy cover the full fee?

Not necessarily. HRD Corp decides the approved amount under its Allowable Cost Matrix, and funding cannot exceed the employer's available levy balance. The programme team supplies the documents needed to apply.

Who applies — the company or the participant?

The employer applies, in e-TRiS, before training begins. The participant does not submit the grant. HRD Corp — not the programme provider — decides approval.

What does the company get back?

An applied project on a real business issue the manager already owns, plus a CMI-recognised programme certificate on successful completion.
